Deconstructing Penguins by Lawrence and Nancy Goldstone (Ballantine Books, 2005) has the attractive subtitle of “Parents, Kids, and the Bond of Reading.” Given my love of reading classic and quality literature to my son, this sounded like it would be a perfect fit for me. Once I began reading, however, I found that the Goldstone’s focus was on discussing children’s literature in a Deconstructing Penguins by Lawrence and Nancy Goldstone ...

Far from deserting their young, penguins are super-parents. Compared with most sea-birds, penguins have a very long pre-ledge duration; from 56 days in the Adelie Penguin (Pygoscelis adeliae) to a staggering fifteen months in the King Penguin. Penguin parental care can be divided into two periods.

I learned about Deconstructing Penguins: Parents, Kids, and the Bond of Reading in the blogosphere, where some homeschoolers have used it to great benefit as a springboard for literary study. It offers the detective as a metaphor for the attentive reader. In the same way detectives strive to solve mysteries, students of literature investigate books.

Then, when the big kids go off to the coffee house next month, the parents and littles will watch the Charlotte's Web movie and do some fun, hands-on activities. So, back to Deconstructing Penguins and middle schoolers. This is getting to be a long post, but hang in there. We're getting to some good stuff yet.

Maureen Wittmann: Deconstructing Penguins

"Deconstructing Penguins" empowers parents to believe they can have real debates about literature with their children right now, even as early as second grade! This is very exciting stuff. I can't wait to revisit some of the classic titles on the authors' reading list, such as Babe and Charlotte's Web, from a totally different perspective.
